Dear Marty, Adam, and Kyle

Thank you for taking the time out of your work so we could interview you. We are extremely grateful for the work you did during the Mosquito Fire. Obviously the whole community really should be thankful for what you did to keep the water flowing for everyone.

After the interview, me and my group received our recording from Cody at Boys and Girls Club. We then cut out insignificant parts of the interview. Then we did voice overs, some narration, and added background music. It was a big process to create the short story.

It really impressed us when you guys told the stories of the process of getting the water safe and usable, even when you were in an evacuation zone. For example, when Marty had to use a computer to manage the water chemical composition. Or, when Kyle and Adam got escorted through the fire zone to be able to clean the grizzlies. And Adam, when he had to manage everyone, even though everyone there was in danger.

Something interesting we learned is how ash, dirt, and other types of debris change the chemical composition of water. We hope that you take the time out of your very busy jobs and listen to the final product. And feel free to share it with people, whether or not it's your family, or coworkers. Once more, thank you for keeping our water safe and free of contaminants.

Thanks again, Ellie, Lukas, and Dylan
